I was thirteen years old in grade eight in Catholic public school learning about sex education. Mr. Gallagher went through the steps in such a dry clinical way that it didn't seem like he was talking about sweaty sultry passionate sex. It was more like the male semen travels down the canal and connects to the female egg, goes through the fallopian tubes to the uterus then germinates over nine months. He didn't say anything about the intensely pleasurable feeling of orgasm so I didn't know what the big deal was.

Up until then, I had seen some old movies about some guy grabbing some girl and passionately kissing her (like From Here to Eternity with Burt Lancaster) but I didn't know what the endgame of it was. Most children have never had an orgasm so they don't know about them when the body says it's time for your first one.

Nobody told me that I would have a natural urge to feel something in my penis so one day when I was home alone in a family of six kids which is rare, my brain told me to stroke my penis and keep stroking it. I knew nothing about orgasm or ejaculation but something told me to do this then I "came" or ejaculated for the first time and was scared. I asked my brothers about it. I guess they didn't want to tell me about masturbation so we went down to the children's library. My brother asked for the sex education books. They pointed to some books behind a desk in the back half, kind of like a separate reference room. They told us we needed our parent's signature to get them. We could have forged a note but we just hung around for awhile looking at other books then when the librarian left the desk, my brother took the books, we hid them in our pants and walked out. Big deal. Those books weren't much better than Mr. Gallagher's sex ed. class. It was 1972.

I didn't have much real sex education; the repackaged unsold skin mags I bought at the used bookstore when I was about 15 which was a big deal back then when they weren't allowed to sell adult magazines to you if you were under 18.

I read the book Everything you Always Wanted to Know About Sex but were Afraid to Ask by Dr. David Reuben which was a joke because I saw the guy on some late-night TV talk show and intuitively knew he didn't have any game. It's not like he really knew about sex firsthand, like he was getting it on with other people every night. It was basically a clinical sex textbook with a gimmicky title.

My brothers had the books The Happy Hooker by Xaveria Hollander and The Hite Report by Sheri Hite which I read along with some sex comics they had. I looked at the drawings in Alex Comfort's Joy of Sex and that was about the extent of it until the late 1990s when I saw a huckster on TV acting like he was an advanced love-sex guru. I thought it was lame preaching monogamy as if it's dogma, saying that mixing sex with drugs is bad which is stupid.

The few times I had real sex as a teen was with girls who wanted to get high off booze and drugs. People want to get high. I want to feel the highest, most euphoric sensations of life.
