Antony Patric St. Lazarre was gay and proud and halfway through obtaining a degree in Communications when he met Collier, a professor at his University. They became lovers and Antony felt his life was complete. But then one of Collier's students falsely accused him of rape, and he was arrested and brutally attacked in the county jail by a group of thugs — and wound up dead. And Antony's life threatened to spin into chaos. It wasn't until a chance comment jolted him out of his grief that Antony began to realize what happened in Holding Cell Six was not “a horrible tragedy that no one have prevented” but was just the latest in a series of vicious sexual assaults visited on innocent men in that room. And the more he dug into its history, the deeper the conspiracy grew until it threatened to destroy not only him but the one person in his life he desperately wanted to protect. Problem is — Antony was far too lost in his hate to see that — or even be able to stop himself before it's too late.
