Weak and Strong States in Asia-Pacific Societies (Studies in World Affairs, 18)

Arising from a workshop held in 1997, this study examines the concepts of weak and strong states within a state-in-society approach. It focuses on South East Asia and Melanesia, areas with a wide variety of states and societies, from the seemingly strong states of Indonesia, Singapore and Vietnam to the apparently weak states of Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, the Solomon Islands and Vanuatu. The contributors analyze why so many states stay intact despite poor services and internal disorder, why seemingly strong states can be strikingly weak in particular areas or at certain times, and why apparently weak states are sometimes remarkably resilient.
