Their Love Will Lead Them To A Fight They Cannot Win

In the blink of an eye, the world I knew changed.

It all started when he moved in. Just for two months, I was informed, two months to complete his training. The first day I met him, I immediately knew that those two months would be the worst of my life.

Conner “The Savior” McXavier.

MMA fighter. No. 1 contender for the XFC Middleweight Championship. The man loathed by the entire world for an incident that marred his legacy and forever scarred the sport.

Foul-mouthed, rude and completely incapable of controlling his anger, he was just as riotous outside the ring as he was inside it. Given my (admittedly) compulsive need for order, he and I were a volatile combination waiting to explode.

There was so much about him to hate. His immature temperament. His inclination for danger. His mouth that sprouts curses with every sentence he uttered. His lean, muscular body - inked and toned - and his ruggedly handsome face. That beard... which only made him look even more manly than he already was. And his distinct power to always haunt my every waking moment with thoughts of him... even during the most inopportune minutes of the day.

As I've said, there's so much about him to hate...

But no matter how hard I tried... I couldn't.

Beneath his strong and craggy exterior lies a man who is kindhearted and sincere... and when he professed his affections for me, my life instantly turned upside down. The gentleness of his touch, the reassuring comfort he provides, the yearning in the way he looks at me, the promise of love...

The answer would've been so easy.

But there are two problems that stand in the way.

One, he's my stepmother's son, a sibling I never knew. We're family, and that makes things very, very complicated.

And two?

I am engaged to another man.
