Physics and the Ultimate Significance of Time

Physics and the Ultimate Significance of Time

David Ray Griffin (born 1939) is a retired American professor of philosophy of religion and theology. Along with John B. Cobb, Jr., he founded the Center for Process Studies in 1973, a research center of Claremont School of Theology which seeks to promote the common good by means of the relational approach found in process thought. This book looks at the subjects of time as it relates to science and theology.
